Like tiny planets round a miniature sun, Cabasse's 'floating' spherical subwoofer and satellites form the Pearl Keshi 2.1 connected music system for a discreet streaming experience.

The French speaker specialist's latest ultra-compact and minimalist addition to its PEARL collection features 1050W (RMS) of digital amplification housed in the 22cm diameter subwoofer which is split between its 8cm satellites (300W each) and the sub itself with 450W.

Each of the spherical speakers is mounted on a chrome-plated steel stand that gives the impression of a floating globe while also minimising the transmission of unwanted vibrations to the floor or surface. For those that prefer wall mounting, the Keshi speaker stands have integrated mounting brackets that allow a choice of five angled positions but the bottom line is that wherever you place the Keshi speakers, they'll be unobtrusive and won't take up much space. But when they are visible, they'll look the part with each Keshi component treated to four successive coats of matte paint on the double reinforced shell.

The satellites are equipped with a new patented large band driver designed for high power handling and long excursion, and featuring a 50-micrometre membrane. Cabasse reckons the dynamics of the music is preserved with no clipping or distortion and the system's DSP ensures faithful reproduction of the musical timbres.

Cabasse equips the sphere with plenty of connectivity options including optical for home cinema system integration, Wi-Fi for streaming the latest music streaming services, including Deezer, Qobuz, Spotify and TIDAL. The 2.1 set-up also works with the Cabasse StreamCONTROL multi-room system, while Bluetooth and 3.5mm options offer linking solutions for CD players and turntables.
